

Are you a PhD student who wants to learn about teaching, build your communication skills, or think about your future as a teacher-scholar? Do you want to connect with peers outside your discipline and join a teaching community? Engage with us!

O1	► Join our email list to stay up to date on new resources and upcoming offerings.
O2	► Prepare to teach for the first time! Check out our Getting Started page and explore our Hit the Ground Running resource site.
O3	► Attend the Fall Teaching Conference and Winter Teaching Week to get new ideas and prepare for the semester ahead!
O4	► Register for one of our Bok Seminars, short courses in teaching and learning offered in foundations, methods and classroom practice, equity and inclusion, communication and language, and professional development.
O5	► International PhD students, learn more about English language speaking, teaching, and intercultural communication with our Professional Communication Program for International Teachers and Scholars.
O6	► Request a class observation or video consultation or talk with your department Pedagogy Fellow to learn more about your own teaching.
O7	► Make a plan! Depending on your department and interests, put together a meaningful program through one of our Teaching Certificates.
O8	► Schedule a consultation with Bok staff to talk about your teaching and communication goals, academic job market materials, or other questions about teaching.